Fibromyalgia: the chronic pain that thwarted Lady Gaga's tour

The singer's debilitating disorder was the reason behind the cancellation of her European tour – but the mysterious condition is not easy to explain

On Monday it was announced that Lady Gaga has cancelled her European tour, due to begin next week, because of "severe physical pain that has impacted her ability to perform". She has fibromyalgia, and has made a Netflix documentary, Gaga: Five Foot Two, to raise awareness about this long-term condition.

A statement says: "She plans to spend the next seven weeks proactively working with her doctors to heal from this and past traumas that still affect her daily life and result in severe physical pain in her body. She wants to give her fans the best version of the show she built for them when the tour resumes."

We've all heard of Lady Gaga, but fibromyalgia syndrome (FMS) may be more of a mystery. It is a condition that is hard to diagnose, explain or treat. FMS is a long-term condition that causes widespread pain. FMS is typically diagnosed in people just like Lady Gaga: female and aged 30-50 (she is 31).

Bonang reprints book without Somizi and Euphonik mentions

Bonang Matheba has re-printed her book, "From A to B" and in doing so has removed all references to her ex-boyfriend, Euphonik, and her ex-bestie, Somizi.

To celebrate the re-printed, Queen B invited fans and members of the media to an exciting book launch in Midrand, Johannesburg, where she displayed a newer, fresher version of her memoir, and one that would not get her in any legal trouble. Both Somizi and Euphonik had threatened legal action against her for the references she had made to them in the book.
